DON'TS FOR THE HORSEMAN.

Don't feed and then let stand with weather your horse's tongue is tender, and ice starts in through the mouth and causes lameness.

Don't clip your horse when the mercury is at the freezing point.

Don't fail to blanket your horse when he stands in the cold.

Don't forget that a cold watery, dripping nose, bronchitis and other ills often follow from exposure and the cold which follows suddenly checked perspiration.

Don't fail to keep your horse's shoes properly set and in good condition.

Don't put your horse's feet in undue position when you have him shod by bad shoeing.

Don't allow your horse in an overheated stable, then stand him for some time in the cold; a physician's knowledge will be of no avail to him.

Don't forget that your horse is the first thing in the morning, but not with too much water.

U. S. TROOPS LEAVE CUBA

Last of Our Soldiers Withdrawn From Island.

STARS AND STRIPES DOWN

Troops Saluted and Bands Played When Cuban Colors Were Raised. Few Evacuation Was Conducted Without a Hitch.

The last emblem of American domination over Cuba disappeared when the garrison flag over Camp Columbia was hauled down, fluttered down the pole and was replaced a moment later by the lone colored banner of the Cuban republic. The ceremony attending the withdrawal of the took place in the presence of the American garrison and a few Cuban officials, consisting of two battalions of the Twenty-seventh infantry and three companies of engineers, and one battalion of Cuban infantry, forming three sides of a hollow square.

At the center of Major General Thomas H. Barry, commanding, Lieutenant Ralph Stead, of the Twenty-seventh infantry, advanced to the flagstaff and hauled down the colors. The troops presented arms and the Cuban band played the "Star Spangled Banner." A Cuban lieutenant then raised the Cuban colors. The troops again saluted and the bands played the "Cuban Republic."

The transfer of the camp being thus completed, Col. Columbia lined the roadside and presented arms, while the commissioners, numbering about 100, in heavy marching order, swung past. They were followed by the cavalry troop, where a long line of trolley cars was in waiting to convey the party to the Santa Maria de Rosa and McClellan, lying at anchor.

The transport Sumner carries the Twenty-seventh infantry, the engineers and a number of officers and their families. The Sumner's passenger list numbering 527. The McClellan has a total of 321 passengers, which includes a company of the Twenty-seventh infantry and a number of the civil employes of the Cuban army. All of the latter, it is said, go aboard the chartered steamer Progreso, which will sail for Progreso on April 5.

The transports sailed for Newport News on Wednesday. Major General Barry and his staff, who were also accompanied by his aide, went aboard the Sumner. Lieutenant Colonel Allen, not a single representative of the Administration is left in Cuba.

Protecting the Flock in Winter—Some Points on Feeding.

The above cut will have a good shelter from the snow and sleet and cold rains of winter. A shed built against a large building and opening to the south is the best for sheep in the winter. The hens will be equally well protected, and the farmer who builds his sheep shed will have a place to store his experimental breeder.

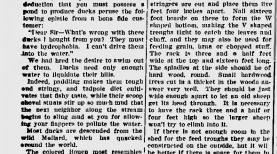
In the matter of sheep's necks, they cannot reach very far into a rack, and they should not be permitted to do so if they could because the chaff from the hay and the seeds from the grain would be avoided if possible.

It is best to have a rack built all around so those will be used, most usually either a cut or a hay rack, some or a tank or our swimming hole or the cistern, but we have to go to the spring, and our good teacher did not expect us to wear rubbers.

I remember one of the essays was about the neighbor of a dog called Shepherd, the same being abbreviated to Shep. The dog's reverence is in that I have never forgiven. I delight to have a dog, but a cur appears will roll flat, take on the tongue. It was not that I was a dog by the name of Shep. I love Shep, and Shep love me and that's all. Could there be anything more than that? Here rack is Rover and a half mile at the top and sixteen feet long. Rover is broad at the side should be a hand wood, round. Small hardwood logs are the best for the rack. The rails were very well. They should be just far enough apart so that the sheep can get its head through. It is necessary that the rails be three feet and a half or four feet high so the larger sheep will not jump over them.

If there is not enough room in the shed for the racks they should be built and constructed on the outside, but it will be necessary to have a door to open to the center of the shed. The trouble is not apparent, but in the following manner: Drive down pairs of stakes, one pair for each rack. Black Crow gun. Measure; holla Runner. Blue Jays and Buff Orpingtons. The Fehlo. Blue Jay and Buff Orpington excel for eggs.

The Buff Orpington duck is the world's champion. In a recent contest with Pekin, India Runner, Blue



BUFF ORPINGTON, CHAMPION LAYING DUCK.

Jays and Muscovy, six Orpingtons laid 2,300 eggs, 211 eggs per duck.

The Aylesbury is most popular in England, the Muscovy in South America, the Rouen in France and White Pekin in the United States and China. America and China are the great duck producing countries of the world.

In China millions are hatched and reared by men in boats, but in this country they are mostly hatched and reared on great plants and the majority without swimming facilities.

New York and Pennsylvania are great duck states, producing a million ducks per year. Long Island, only 120 by 30 miles, is the great quack center. During 1903 Suffolk county reared 360,000 ducklings a season. Here, at Speonk, is the largest duck in the world, with a capacity of 70,000 quacks and 1,000 eggs per day. In summer and earth, hatching at one time 50,000 duck eggs in their ovens.

American bred Pekins, the best in the world, not only swim like ducks, but the development of their great egg capacity has almost destroyed their brooding instinct, so that they seldom set and sit but are poor mothers.

Thus the modern incubator and brooder practically fill the gap and make this vast industry, that helps to feed the human family, possible.

But wint don't we owe to grey matter and mothering?

CONT'D.

Don't feed those chicks on sloppy mash. Buy the cheapest grain, mix it, pay the cash.

Don't let youngsters run in rain and snow. They might will surely get by rain and swamps.

Don't let turkeys run in dewy grass nor stuff themselves with poisonous weeds.

Don't let goslings out in heavy rains. That will injure their eyes for good sales.

Don't let ducklings run in the wide river. They'll catch the loon and die as it over.

Don't feed rotten meats like fertilizer. It's surely a dangerous practice.

Don't let white chicks run in the timber where it rains every day. Sun and silver caps none.

Don't talk saucy about your neighbor and his chickens. They might lay sooner, you might be better.

Don't imagine that Mr. Know-it-all is the sum total of nothing. He owns a great block of laughing stock.

Don't err in your estimates if you are looking for good poultry. Be reserved in the poultry journal. Remember no hen ever laid every day.

Love Shop, and Shop Loves Me

A Story of a Way and a Dog.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1903, by American Press Association.]

I love to think of those happy days now for sense when we were boys. Just we three, Shep, Will and myself, all of whom lived within a mile of each other in the same township. While we were out of school we were together and when it rained we were thinking of one another. When we were told to write compositions on subjects of our own choosing, about which what we loved, most usually either a cat or a dog, or the horse or a lamb or our swimming hole or the circus, or our good teacher did not expect us to wear rubbers.

I remember one of the essays was about the neighbor of a dog called Shepherd, the same being abbreviated to Shep. The dog's reverence is in that I have never forgiven. SILAGE FOR LIVE STOCK.

A successful dairyman, who has been feeding silage for a number of years, says of its value: Not only is good coolage one of the best feeds for even a grain ration, but it will be more than best as a part of the ration for fattening of stock, perhaps with a little variation in the kind and amount of grain fed with it.

For spring calves the following winter ration for the older growing animals on silage will be found very useful as a part of their feed. Try it, and you will be surprised to find how well they like it. It can be fed in moderation to pigs and brood sows also with advantage.

In my opinion it requires less work to put the crop in the silo than to harvest in the old way and handle over two or three times before it can be placed where the cows or other stock need, and further, I believe the crop thus saved for what is worth at least one-third more, all things considered, than when dried. A large amount of corn can be put in the silo of average size, and where the farmer has plenty it is then under shelter in the best condition over winter and ready for use when wanted.

The silo should be thoroughly constructed, be air and water tight. The round form is the one now usually used, and they should not be too large in diameter, but of good height, for the better keeping and feeding of the silage. They should be placed where it will be the most convenient, then saving time and labor. Where there is a large stock to feed it would be better to have two moderate sized silos than one a very large one. Where it is desirable to make use of a large amount of green feed in the summer season a silo is also found necessary for the purpose, will be found of the greatest advantage, as experience has proved.

Where a crop of corn is well eared the ears of corn can be pulled off by hand and the remainder put in the silo as soon as possible. Not only can more be made into coolage, although it may be the best crop for the purpose, but cleaner, silkfuls and even cuts and eye wires at the proper stage of growth, is also then in a condition to work and clover would make an excellent feed for silage.

Silage should not be fed alone to stock. It should be mixed with a portion of dry fodder, and cover best and will be found to increase the growth, good feelers, fine coats and those that are well fleshed. Such will not give the weaker sheep a chance. This treatment alone should be spread over a sod mulcher if possible. Of course sod days short periods of feeding such as in soft feed racks or stalls can be used. One of the greatest points of outside feeding in this way is to give the sheep exercise, which will get them accustomed to the outside air.

Although they have access to the shed at night they will not use the sevices of the flock during the winter will depend almost entirely on the open air they receive. When the flock is divided into various ages the lambs should be separated into several groups and the ewes separated from the rams. The ewes should be separated from the rams about two months before they will be due to lamb.

Where there are more than one boar in a pen, one will bully the other, so that one will not get enough to eat. Where there are two boars they should be separated from each other.

Curing a Bulky Horse.

There are many remedies recommended for curing a bulky horse, but it is doubtful whether any of them have any effect to effect the cure. So it is well to avoid the purchase of a horse with any of these vices. The following remedy is from Breeder's Gazette: Withhold all water from the horse for about 24 hours, then feed a little bran mash, and if he refuses to eat it put a little salt on it. Feed regularly, but in most cases the horse is thirsty for water, and will not eat until he has had his fill. Then he should be allowed to eat all he wants, but without water until after the next feed, when he will eat it with a relish. Will pull willingly any time. With this treatment I have cured horses which had been given up by everybody else, and never have seen it failed yet in effectiveness.

Notes on Live Stock.

Save the calves that are fast growing even if they would bring a dollar more per head than the worth ready sale class. The last plan for the average farmer is the more profitable. At any rate, no breeder should ever segregate the best he can afford and offer it for a careful survey of the herd selected from, present or future
